They told us when we bought this property 20 years ago that this oak tree was sick and possibly dying. It was 200 years old and still had not bloomed by late May. Here is our Grandmother Oak today as she blossoms into her 3rd century. Recently I found out that oak trees can live a thousand years. I'm guessing she's just getting started. Big love and good health to you all 💕

Town has become so quiet, the animals have started checking on us to make sure we're doing okay 🤔

View from my porch in Kachikau, Botswana, early morning. I am a wildlife guide in South Africa and Botswana, where we are privileged to live with free wildlife animals. Like most of the world we are locked down with only essential services allowed to continue. But outside my window and my porch life goes on, like it did for millions of years on the plains of Africa. Please stay safe.

This is such a basic view that shows the monotony of residential neighborhoods of many areas in Shanghai. My other view is a distant one of the Shanghai Tower. I am staying safe but then again, we are not in lockdown as much of the world is these days. — in Shanghai, China.

Good morning good people !! This is a view from my window, from my home in Bulgaria, Gabrovo around 9:30. Today is my birthday and the biggest gift is that my son is home !! You have beautiful streets and gardens, our planet is a magical place !! I am a psychotherapist, and I continue to work online, and the isolation has enabled me to start painting again, most of all, surprise portraits of my friends and acquaintances by publishing them. Find forgotten things that make you happy at the moment or look for a challenge in new ones !! 🍷 Be healthy and save your life !! 🍷🍷

This is the only view from my only window, and I love it. I'm staying at my son and daughter-in-law's house in Seattle in the guest room in the basement. This is the most beautiful view because I am staying with them for as long as it takes. I am glad and grateful to be here and not alone in room quarantine in my retirement community.
